EXPLANATION OF KEY NUMBER ANALYSIS

The West Key Number analysis of American law is a scheme whereby the entire body of American law has been conceptualized and arranged in an orderly and logical way. It is easily the most important scheme of its type and has long been an essential tool for case law research. The application of this scheme to West's digests and to WESTLAW and West's CD-ROM products allows ready access to all published decisions.

The Key Number analysis contains about four hundred major topics, each one of which is further subdivided. There are over 100,000 individual Key Numbers used in the arrangement. Following is an explanation of the method by which individual digest paragraphs are distributed among the various topics and individual Key Numbers.

The scheme is based upon the following general categories:

- (1) PERSONS
- (2) PROPERTY
- (3) CONTRACTS
- (4) TORTS
- (5) CRIMES
- (6) REMEDIES
- (7) GOVERNMENT

The single words denoting the categories are to be understood as if each was preceded by the words, "Matters Relating to." Thus, category 1, as representing all matters relating to persons, includes everything incident to or connected with the existence and protection by the law of all persons, natural or artificial, and of every distinct class of persons, their relations, rights, and obligations of a personal nature, combination of persons in partnerships, associations, and companies, and the various classes of occupations. So, category 2 includes not only the subjects of rights of property, but also the various estates therein, and rights and obligations in respect thereof, and whatever is primarily incident to or connected with property, as conveyances and other modes of acquiring and transferring it.

The order in which these categories are enumerated above furnishes a general rule, easily applied, for the distribution of the matter among the various topics and their subdivisions, by simply following the order of precedence in placing matters capable of being included under two or more topics. Thus, a digest may contain matters relating to infants, in respect to (1) protection of person; (2) disposition of property; (3) disability to contract; (4) liability for torts; (5) responsibility for crime; (6) capacity to sue or defend; (7) eligibility for office. The matters here enumerated correspond to the several categories, and most of them might be considered as presenting a question as to whether the matter should be placed under the topic "Infants" or under some other topic. The rule of precedence stated above assigns them all to "Infants," because that topic, as designating the class of persons affected, is within category 1. The rule is applied in like manner to all matters relating to other classes of persons, under such topics as "Mental Health," "Marriage and Cohabitation," "Convicts." The subdivision and arrangement of the matter under the respective topics also follow, as closely as practicable, the same order of precedence, generally using as subheads, etc., the terms denoting the categories, expanded or otherwise modified to suit the requirements of the particular subject.

The operation of the rule of precedence may be further illustrated by its application to a subject in another category, such as negligence, which, as a tort, is included in category 4. The liabilities for negligence of an infant (the personal incapacity being involved), or for negligence of an employer as to his employee (the personal relation being involved), are assigned to the appropriate topics belonging to category 1, "Infants" and "Labor and Employment," respectively; the liability for negligence as to the condition of demised premises (the existence of the estate for years being involved) is assigned to the topic including that estate belonging to category 2, "Landlord and Tenant"; and so of every case of negligence involving any obligation of a personal, property, or contract nature. This leaves for the "Negligence" only matters arising between "strangers," independent of any distinctions peculiar to classes of persons or species of property or peculiar rights or obligations incident to either or to contracts relating thereto. As to the matters so included, the topic "Negligence" covers them fully,—what constitutes actionable negligence; the doctrine of proximate cause; and contributory negligence, including imputed and comparative negligence. And, further, it includes, by reason of its precedence over subsequent categories, matters which might belong to them, such as actions for negligence and procedure therein, and criminal responsibility for negligence.

This rule of precedence is subject, of course, to exceptions, and is not applied contrary to established usage or reasons of practical convenience. Thus, the capacity of a person—infant, married woman, alien—to make a deed or contract is placed, by this rule, and by usage, under the topic including the class of persons; consistency and the rule would also place there the capacity of such person to make a will, but usage places it under the topic "Wills," and it is apparent that such matter cannot be separated conveniently from questions of testamentary capacity and undue influence. But where no usage or reason to the contrary exists, there remains a wide field for the application of the rule.

In the development of the following scheme, considerations of convenience in doing the work, and consistency in the result, made it desirable that subjects of similar nature should be disposed of together, and in a manner as nearly identical as possible. For this purpose, the subjects to which the contents of a digest may relate, after being assigned to the different categories, are further divided, so far as necessary, into classes, and under each class the topics selected for the subjects in the class are arranged so as to bring together similar subjects. This arrangement is set forth in full at the end of this explanation.

The terms employed to describe these subdivisions of the categories, including the titles used as topics, are all to be understood as preceded by the words "Matters Relating to," and are to be taken in a comprehensive sense. Thus "Burglary," as a topic, is not limited to its technical meaning at common law or under any particular statute, but includes every breaking of a building with criminal intent, even though it may be designated in the statute defining the offense as "Housebreaking," or "Breaking and Entering." Technical accuracy is very desirable in framing the paragraphs for a digest, but is not practicable in the selection of topics, especially for a general digest.

Many of the topics properly include matters belonging to more than one of the categories or classes above mentioned. Thus, several topics, such as "Assault and Battery," designate both a tort and a crime. No practical difficulty arises in such case, since, in the subdivisions, the matters are separated; as, under the topic mentioned, the private injury and the civil action, the public offense and the criminal prosecution, are distinct subdivisions, each of which is treated in that form as if it were a distinct topic. Such double topics are placed in the category or class to which the more important part belongs.

The selection or rejection of particular topics, where any such question has not been decided by usage or practical convenience, is determined in accordance with a principle or rule of general application. Thus, in category 1, "Persons," class 5, "Particular Occupations," the topics included cover or designate occupations which, because of their nature, the law has subjected to special regulations, obligations, or liabilities; rejecting those which are subject only to general regulations, such as licenses or occupation taxes, and to ordinary obligations or liabilities. So, in category 7, "Government," classes 4 and 5, the topics included which designate particular officers are the titles of officers having duties connected with the administration of the law; other officers are included under general titles, such as "Public Employment," "States," "Counties," etc. Examination and comparison of the scope notes will disclose the principle or rule followed in particular instances.

The form adopted for particular topics in cases of divided usage is controlled by regard for uniformity as to topics of the same class. Thus, in category 1, class 2, "Particular Classes of Natural Persons," where each of the classes of persons is distinguished by the existence of a particular legal disability, the name of the particular class is preferred to the term denoting the disability or condition; i.e., "Infants" rather than "Infancy" is used. As between substantives and adjectives, the substantive is preferred, especially as the initial word of a topic, unless the adjective be the important or significant word. Thus, "Internal Revenue" is preferred to "Revenue." As to the use of the singular or plural form of the topics, in the absence of any settled usage, the rule adopted is to use the singular for titles of an abstract nature, the plural for the concrete. A ready test is made by prefixing to any title the words hereinbefore suggested as necessarily implied,—“Matters Relating to,”—which usually suggest the appropriate form.

In addition to the scope notes under the topics, subheads are given under each, exhibiting in another form its scope and extent. In this subclassification of the respective main topics, both the making and the use of the digest are facilitated by applying to subjects similar in their nature a like method of analysis, employing like terms to designate their subdivisions, and using a like order of arrangement of subdivisions, so far as practicable, giving due prominence to the peculiar features of each subject. Thus, the subclassification of all the various crimes is easily based on one general outline, with additions or omissions to adapt it to each; and so, to a greater or less extent, of contracts, torts, civil actions, criminal prosecutions, and nearly all other classes of subjects involved. The form of the arrangement is adapted to the quantity of matter to which it is to be applied, like terms being employed, under different topics, as subheads or subdivisions thereof, or as black-letter headings or subheadings, as any or all of these may be required.

Comparison of subdivisions will show this similarity of treatment of similar subjects, such as "Infants" and "Guardian and Ward" and "Executors and Administrators," "Principal and Agent" and "Labor and Employment."
